

ROGER GRANNIS

KEYNOTES THAT EDUCATE, ENTERTAIN, AND INSPIRE

Roger Grannis is the managing director of Clearview24, a training and consulting firm that helps Fortune 500 companies around the world drive sustainable growth through more effective communication.

Unlike most consultants, Roger brings high energy, high content, and high humor to every engagement, whether it's delivering a keynote, teaching a workshop, developing a solution, or coaching an executive.

He excels at helping people shine on stage, in conference rooms, across their desks, and on the telephone. His ability to help others translate complex, technical concepts into clear, actionable intelligence has helped thousands of sales professionals, technical experts, and business leaders influence decisions and improve business performance.

Prior to forming Clearview24 in 2004, Roger was known as The Voice of Gartner, where he spent 17 years in sales, sales training, and product management. He created Gartner Sales University, launched and hosted Gartner's popular podcast Talking Technology, and shepherded the rollout of dozens of company acquisitions. Before Gartner, Roger was the top producer and national sales manager at Osborne/McGraw-Hill.

Throughout his career, Roger has been called upon to infuse corporate events with insight, energy, and humor. He has moderated panels of business luminaries such as Steve Ballmer, former president and CEO of Microsoft.

Roger Grannis is a communications expert and motivational humorist who has presented to audiences around the world—groups as small as 10 and as large as 10,000.

Roger has incorporated more than 30 years in sales, communications, and media production into his role as president of Clearview24, where he speaks, trains, and coaches full-time.

A natural humorist, Roger uses his entertaining stories to underscore key concepts. He always leaves audiences feeling rejuvenated and with concrete skills they can implement immediately.
